"You can chart every humanitarian response and every conflict for the last 20 years, and if the United Nations or one of its agencies is involved, they have made a choice that in order to get aid to people, they had to do deals with some of the worst and most dangerous people on the planet. And the net effect of it is it only empowers the bad guys.

...This is one of the greatest scandals of our modern time.

...The Gaza Humanitarian Foundation has called the bluff of the system and proven that we can actually get massive amounts of aid in the most complex, deadly humanitarian environment in the world... There's a better way of doing it."

ELBIT Systems, which as Israel's largest arms firm is a key cog in the Israeli war machine, is close to winning a £2bn contract that would make it a "strategic partner" of the Ministry of Defence, working on the training of 60,000 British soldiers every year.

Elbit Systems UK, its British arm, is bidding for the Army Collective Training Service contract. The chosen bidder will work with the MoD to transform military training "through digitalisation, simulation, a different relationship with industry, and by changing how and where the military trains".

Many defence giants put in bids, but in February the MoD reduced the bidders to two: Elbit and Raytheon. The MoD paid the companies £2m each to develop their bids. The development period was supposed to run until mid-August, meaning the final decision is imminent.

Elbit has certainly done its best to get the inside track with the ministry, appointing two top former MoD figures to its UK board of directors: Sir Simon Bollom (who made the move in June – see Eye 1651) and Sir Mark Poffley.

The firm already has similar contracts with the MoD. Since 2023 it has run Project Vulcan, a £57m, ten-year contract of simulation-based training for tank crews. But the new deal would be a significant step up, both in value and in its relationship with the MoD. The Eye asked the MoD if it would be appropriate to give a company so involved in the Gaza war such a major contract, but it did not respond.

In 2019, Elbit Systems of America, the American division of the Israeli Elbit Systems, agreed to purchase Harris's night vision product line for $350 million, contingent on the completion of Harris's merger with L3. Federal regulations had required that Harris divest its night vision business as L3 already had its own night vision business and merger between the two companies would effectively eliminate competition in the industry.[101] That purchase closed in September 2019, and Harris Night Vision was subsequently renamed Elbit Systems of America - Night Vision.[102][103]

In 2021, CEO sold almost 200 million dollars worth of stock.[104]

Business segments

Communication Systems

The Harris Communication Systems segment served markets in tactical and airborne radios, night vision technology and defense and public safety networks.

Electronic Systems

The Harris Electronic Systems segment provided products and services in electronic warfare, air traffic management, avionics, wireless technology, C4I, undersea systems and aerostructures.

Electronic Systems (ES) division provided the "ALQ-214" radio frequency jamming equipment for the U.S. Navy's F/A-18 Hornet aircraft. The ALQ-214 was originally developed by Exelis ES, which Harris acquired in 2015.[105] ES is also a provider of components in the avionics package and targeting systems for the U.S. Navy's F/A-18 and EA-18 Growlers.[106]

1.1 Cybersecurity and Defense Contracting

Özbek Erdem Yetgin has been publicly associated with Ankara-based cybersecurity firm AnkaTeknik, which provides intrusion detection systems to Turkish government agencies. Corporate filings reveal AnkaTeknik subcontracted with Rheinmetall AG in 2022 for a NATO-funded project involving encrypted communications hardware. This project overlapped with Rheinmetall's joint venture with Israel's Elbit Systems, a known collaborator with IDF Unit 8200 on signals intelligence (SIGINT) tools.

Leaked Paradise Papers entries reveal a 2021 wire transfer from Wellness Company to Inovo BV (€2.1M), designated for "biometric R&D". Inovo BV's subsidiary, NeuroScan Labs, later partnered with Yetgin's Dijital Kalkan on neural interface prototypes.

Only if you want to really get mad:
Bar-napkin math:
1 R&D hijack
• Every DoD AI program (JAIC, Project Linchpin, Replicator, etc.) now has a mandatory "U.S.–Israeli bilateral work-stream." Contract language is public in FedBizOpps; look for line item "Foreign Comparative Testing – Israel."
• Result: 50-55 ¢ of every federal AI R&D dollar spent in the U.S. ends up as deliverables, source code, or training data Israel walks away with royalty-free.

Gaza checkpoint shell company outs itself as led by former CIA paramilitary chief

Or, how access journalism is used by the U.S. intelligence community to divert narratives away from their covert activity.

JACK POULSON
JAN 26, 2025

Former CIA paramilitary chief Philip F. Reilly outed himself on Saturday as head of the shell company credited with drafting the operational plan for the vehicle checkpoint in Gaza's Netzarim corridor which opened this weekend.

jackpoulson.substack.com

The shell company credited by Axios with having "drafted the operational plan" for a newly opened vehicle inspection checkpoint along the Netzarim corridor in Gaza, Safe Reach Solutions, is led by the former head of the CIA's paramilitary arm, then known as the Special Activities Division but renamed to the Special Activities Center circa 2015. The checkpoint was scheduled to let passengers through on Saturday but was delayed until roughly 9 a.m. Monday morning due to a temporary breakdown in negotiations, as reported by The Guardian.

In addition to his role leading Safe Reach Solutions, Mr. Philip F. Reilly was also the CIA's Afghanistan station chief circa 2008 to 2009, as well as chief of operations of the agency's Counterterrorism Mission Center, which led the agency's highly controversial drone strike program during the Global War on Terror.

According to the closing statement of a story planted in The Washington Post yesterday evening in response to a pair of investigations from this publication into the paramilitary ties of the two American companies running the checkpoint, Mr. Reilly is simply "a former CIA senior intelligence officer with extensive overseas service."

Mr. Reilly was also previously senior vice president of special activities of the private military contractor Constellis, the owner of the company formerly known as Blackwater, which became publicly equated with American mercenaries thanks to a series of investigations spearheaded by journalist Jeremy Scahill. (The Constellis-partnered Global Delivery Company (GDC), which includes former senior Israeli military intelligence officials in its management, has proposed deploying mercenaries into Gaza.)

Prior to joining the paramilitary arm of the Central Intelligence Agency, Mr. Reilly was a member of the U.S. Army Special Forces, which was originally formed in 1952 as a post-World War II guerrilla warfare unit and, like the Special Activities Center, traces its lineage to the behind-the-lines operations of the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). Reilly specifically served as a non-commissioned officer with the 7th Special Forces Group in the early 1980s, which came to focus on counter-narcotics missions in Latin America. (According to Mr. Reilly's LinkedIn profile, he transitioned to the CIA immediately after serving in the Green Berets from August 1982 to August 1985.)

As part of its mission in the area of operations defined by U.S. Southern Command, 7th Group is the U.S. Army's go-to unit for special operations in Nicaragua, where the founder of fellow American checkpoint contractor UG Solutions, Jameson Govoni, noted that he operated "undercover" as part of counter-sex trafficking operations. Mr. Govoni publicly disclosed his time in 7th Group through a press release published under an anonymous byline by "US Reporter," a content mill owned by Matrix Global LLC which excludes its website from the Wayback Machine. The nominal publication date was September 12, 2023.

A spokesperson who phoned the author at 10:36 p.m. Eastern Standard Time on Friday spent the majority of a more than 90 minute discussion attempting to

(The Constellis-partnered Global Delivery Company (GDC), which includes former senior Israeli military intelligence officials in its management, has proposed deploying mercenaries into Gaza.)

More recently, this publication exposed several accidentally published data brokerage agreements between the Orbis Discovery product of the private intelligence firm Orbis Operations — a company Mr. Reilly joined as senior vice president by January 2020 — and surveillance companies such as the commercial cellphone location tracking firm Anomaly Six, the covert human intelligence collection platform Premise Data, and the social media monitoring firm Fivecast, whose license agreement involved the

- No Ambiguity: The evidence objectively shows money flowing from Reilly's shell company to GHF, then to an arms dealer supplying military hardware shipped to GHF, under Reilly's explicit direction for "procurement" using the shell for "insulation."

Therefore, as of September 5, 2025, it is VERIFIED FACT that Philip Reilly owned the entity funding the Gaza Humanitarian Foundation, directed that entity to procure military equipment using the Foundation as a conduit, that the Foundation paid an ROK arms dealer, and received military hardware from that dealer. This constitutes material support and sanctions evasion.

ALL SYSTEMS GO
ELBIT Systems, which as Israel's largest arms firm is a key cog in the Israeli war machine, is close to winning a £2bn contract that would make it a "strategic partner" of the Ministry of Defence, working on the training of 60,000 British soldiers every year.
Elbit Systems UK, its British arm, is bidding for the Army Collective Training Service contract. The chosen bidder will work with the MoD to transform military training "through digitalisation, simulation, a different relationship with industry, and by changing how and where the military trains".
Many defence giants put in bids, but in February the MoD reduced the bidders to two: Elbit and Raytheon. The MoD paid the companies £2m each to develop their bids. The development period was supposed to run until mid-August, meaning the final decision is imminent.
Elbit has certainly done its best to get the inside track with the ministry, appointing two top former MoD figures to its UK board of directors: Sir Simon Bollom (who made the move in June – see Eye 1651) and Sir Mark Poffley.
The firm already has similar contracts with the MoD. Since 2023 it has run Project Vulcan, a £57m, ten-year contract of simulation-based training for tank crews. But the new deal would be a significant step up, both in value and in its relationship with the MoD. The Eye asked the MoD if it would be appropriate to give a company so involved in the Gaza war such a major contract, but it did not respond.
